Grandparents Wellness Guide

Active Aging, Anti-Inflammatory Herbs, & Easily Digestible Low-GI Recipes

Introduction: Nutrition for Active Aging

As our parents and grandparents age, their metabolic rate slows down, insulin sensitivity decreases, and their digestive capacity weakens. Many elderly family members suffer from joint pain, sluggish digestion, and unstable energy levels.

This guide is designed by geriatric nutrition experts to provide:

- 1. Digestive Comfort: Soft textures and pre-digested/fermented foods that do not bloat.
- 2. Anti-Inflammatory Action: Incorporating traditional Indian herbs (turmeric, ginger, fenugreek) that reduce joint inflammation.
- 3. Low-GI Energy: Slow-release carbs that keep their energy stable throughout the day without overloading their kidneys.

Section 1: The Golden Rules of Elderly Nutrition

- 1. Soft Textures: Dental issues and decreased saliva production make hard foods difficult to chew. Emphasize steamed, stewed, and slow-cooked textures.
- 2. Gut-Friendly Spices: Use cumin, fennel, and asafoetida (hing) in every meal to stimulate digestive enzymes and reduce gas/bloating.
- 3. Hydration & Minerals: Ensure high-calcium and high-potassium intake (finger millets, drumstick leaves, coconut water) to support bone density and heart health.

Section 2: Core Wellness Recipes
